

I feel that the FCC should leave the Wisconsin Do Not Call law alone. The citizens of Wisconsin who are on that list are on it for a reason: they do not want to be harassed or subjected to annoying telephone calls from ANY telemarketers. I think that the CBA should leave us alone. If a consumer wants to be contacted by CBA, or any other business, they should make contact. If the CBA is so worried about contacting customers, use the US Postal Service instead of tying up telephone lines, especially if the customer uses a cell phone for all calls. This would mean that, each time a telemarketer calls, the customer is billed for the call. That is just wrong, and should not be allowed to happen. Keep the Wisconsin law as it is, and protect the consumers of Wisconsin from annoying and harassing telephone calls.

Thank you.
